Subject: 216. Red Team (KGB Archives): Are there Russian spies that we did not catch? And why not?

Dr. Fischhoff and Colleagues:

The opening of KGB and Eastern European archives is an exciting opportunity to ask: How many spies did the CIA and FBI not catch during the Cold War? And what lessons should the DNI learn?

For example were the FBI statistics- (and behavioral science-) based profiling methods and the use of lie detectors only effective for a small group of spies - i.e., those that were caught?

- The retrospective analysis would add an interesting footnote to the McCarthy period in the US: How many Russian spies were there?
